Insight into Manhattan Luxury Real Estate

I hope this month's update finds you well and that you had an enjoyable Memorial Day holiday. With school winding down and temperatures rising, we are gearing up for Summer days ahead.

May proved to be a month of continued momentum for New York's luxury market. The Manhattan luxury market in particular showed impressive strength throughout the month. May concluded with an impressive 32 properties priced $4 million and above going under contract during the week leading up to Memorial Day. This volume surpassed the 10-year average of 26 contracts signed for the same period, highlighting continued strength in the luxury segment of the market.

Moreover, luxury buyers have been a driving force behind the market's strong performance. In mid-May, we witnessed the strongest week of sales for the year so far, with an impressive 43 contracts signed for properties priced $4 million and higher. This not only marks the peak week of 2023 but also the highest weekly total for luxury contracts since May of 2022. It's evident that luxury buyers are actively engaging in the market and seizing opportunities.

In terms of pricing, New York City's median home price reached a 5-year high in April, hitting $1 million. Across the five boroughs, the median asking price also rose to $1.049 million, the highest level since June 2018. This represents an encouraging 7.6% increase from April last year, emphasizing the ongoing value and potential within the market.

While sales are certainly more moderate this year compared to 2021 and 2022, it is important to note that the New York market has remained robust, even in the face of elevated mortgage rates and historic inflation. In fact, New York had one of the strongest starts to the year of the past decade, demonstrating its resilience and attractiveness to investors globally.

What factors are driving these transactions and bolstering prices? One key element is the limited supply. Low interest rates have encouraged many individuals to stay in their current homes rather than list them for sale. As a result, finding move-in ready properties with desirable features can be challenging at certain price points. This scarcity in supply has helped to create a floor on home prices. Accurate pricing has become essential, with sellers becoming more realistic about what they are willing to accept. Luxury buyers want to feel like they are getting value for their investment, and as a result, transactions are being driven by price drops and sellers aligning their expectations with the current market conditions. We cannot stress the importance of correctly pricing your property on the marketing as a serious seller.

Despite the uncertainties surrounding various aspects of the economy, the Manhattan luxury real estate market continues to offer attractive opportunities. As we begin to head into the Summer season, it is important to remember that Summer is actually one of the best times of the year to get a deal done and capitalize on opportunity as competition tends to be lower.
